

Supply chains are diverse and can range from a single operation with one distribution center to a complex and robust network spanning hundreds of locations and multiple methods of in-house transportation. Because supply chains vary significantly depending on company size and industry, private equity firms face unique challenges while navigating portfolio companies' pre- and post- acquisition transactions.

A Strategic End-to-End Partner

As a true integrated supply chain consulting and technology provider, enVista offers unparalleled experience in serving private equity firms in various capacities both pre- and post-acquisition. Our services include acquisition due diligence supply chain assessments and post-acquisition supply chain optimization, in which portfolio company supply chains are analyzed for operational gaps and opportunities with the goal of adding incremental value.

By identifying synergies and efficiencies during due diligence, enVista is able to offer recommendations to optimize the portfolio company's supply chain, as well as implement one or more services from our suite of solutions. In addition to performing due diligence and supply chain optimization, we offer continued support and share best practices throughout our partnership to enable strategic investment decisions, improve portfolio company performance and increase realized value.

Due Diligence Supply Chain Assessments

Unexplored gaps in a portfolio company's supply chain can impact anticipated deal value, as well as EBITDA, making it vital to have a deep understanding of the company's current supply chain. enVista's supply chain due diligence assessment can be completed in a two- to three-week timeframe, in which we assess and analyze the portfolio company's current supply chain. Our assessment model, which is based on our operational experience from source to consumption, includes information technology, people and organizational design, performance management and supply chain strategy.
